

carol@carolrossandassociates.com | www.carolrossandassociates.com | 303.666.0580

Questions to Ponder

Sometimes the muse calls to us in odd and strange ways. One day, I was flooded with questions.

What happens when we listen and see the world with open eyes?

How can children show us the way to a better world?

Where and when will the Universe play the next joke on us?

Who invited us to the party to begin with? And what if we were supposed to bring more than a six pack of beer?

Could it be possible that we were meant to do more than tie our identities to the hitching post of corporations and job titles?

What lessons do my enemies have to teach me? And more importantly, what has my spouse been trying to teach me for the last twenty years?

Who invented cubicles and offices when a backyard patio works just fine at times? And isn't it odd that as soon as technology enables us to work from anyplace, we go back to nature and latte shops?

Why don't more people laugh at their own jokes? And if they did, could they find them as funny as the first time they heard the joke?

Why do people clamor for time with one another, when what they really want is presence?

Can fingernails really be used as weapons by an eight year old boy?

If flowers could talk, what would they say?

Why does mosquito repellent have to smell so bad?

How can we learn to love without being afraid of being hurt?

Which birds wake up the earliest to start chirping at four in the morning?

Can milk really be a lubricant for peanut butter stuck in the roof of one's mouth?

What do babies dream about?

What would it look like to have a workplace where creativity and trust are part of the bottom line?

And my favorite: At what temperature does lipstick melt?

Copyright © 2006 by Carol Ross and Associates, LLC. , www.carolrossandassociates.com. Contact carol@carolrossandassociates.com for reprint permission. If you enjoyed this article, visit Carol's blog, www.blog.carolrossandassociates.com, and podcasts, www.liveactioncoaching.com, www.leadingwithawholenewmind.com, and www.consciousliving-leaving.com. Carol is an executive coach, organization development consultant, and writer with over 20 years experience in the telecommunications and energy industries. Carol specializes in helping clients get unstuck and into the flow of great work. She works her magic by bringing the power of the creative, intuitive right brain into a left-brained world. While her degrees in engineering from Northwestern University have served her well, it's been her life and work experiences that have moved her to do her best work. She is certified by The Coaches Training Institute and credentialed by the International Coach Federation.